ROBERT DUNSMUIR

Robert Dunsmuir was born in Scotland in 1825. Hired by the Hudson's Bay Company to work as a coalminer, he arrived on Vancouver Island in 1851. Eighteen years later, he discovered coal at Wellington near Nanaimo. The Wellington Seam proved to be the richest deposit of coal on the Island. An astute businessman, Dunsmuir parlayed Wellington coal into a fortune.

In 1882, Robert Dunsmuir entered politics. He represented Nanaimo in the provincial legislature and he became the most powerful member of the provincial cabinet.

In 1883, he won the contract to build the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway and became the beneficiary of substantial government subsidies. The E & N was officially opened on 13 August 1886 when Canadian Prime Minister, Sir John A. Macdonald drove the last spike at Cliffside (on the Malahat at mile 25.)

When Robert Dunsmuir died aged 64, he was the province's premier capitalist, British Columbia's wealthiest man.

Craigdarroch ~pronounced Craig Derek ~ is a Scotitsh Gaelic word, which means "Rocky Oak Place" and describes the grounds of the original estate which extended over 28 acres.
